Company philosophy

It's not only about cars. They don't mean much without the people driving them. Therefore, very early in our history, we shifted focus from four-wheeled machines to the humans sitting inside them. In everything we do, we first put ourselves in their shoes. How can they get more out of life, not just their cars? How can they walk the tight rope balancing dreams and duties? Only then can we offer products that enrich the daily lives of those using them. For example, we design affordable cars with clever features that don't scream for attention but quickly become a good habit, like a spacious luggage compartment even in liftback versions, a hook to hold groceries or safe engineering that watches out for your loved ones while you watch the road. Cars that are practical enough for fathers but exciting enough for the men behind the wheel. Now with new cars and a new logo, ŠKODA is ready to offer new experiences too. But while embracing the new, we are still honouring old commitments, like the ongoing official sponsorship of the Tour de France. This, along with our support of events like the IIHF World Championship, is proof that our human philosophy also gets translated outside the factory. After all, life isn't lived just on the road.

History

The first ŠKODA cars of over a century ago and today's models still have something in common – they are built to best suit our customer's demands.

A journey into our present won't be complete without a quick trip into our past. In December 1895, the mechanic Václav Laurin and the bookseller Václav Klement, both bicycle enthusiasts, started manufacturing bicycles they designed themselves. Four years later, they built their first motorcycles.

It was only a matter of time before the two-wheeled vehicles shifted to four and Laurin & Klement Co. produced its first automobile in 1905. Twenty years later, the company merged with Pilsen ŠKODA Co. and hence earned its now famous name. The following years saw it rolling out many classics and bestsellers, which became the cultural icons of their times.

While we made history often, we also had the strength to overcome it. Over time we withstood two world wars and the separation of the founding state of Czechoslovakia. Also, we have already completed twenty years of a successful partnership with the Volkswagen Group.

Indeed, all of that experience and discovery of over a century finds its way into the cars we build today.

Where mysteries are waiting to be discovered and unravelled. All you need is a taste for the unknown and an eye for the unseen. ## ŠKODA GreenLine

At ŠKODA we care for not just the people driving our cars, but also their environment. This begins with creating vehicles that leave the least impact on the world they drive in. The eco-friendly GreenLine range of our cars is one of our many steps in the right direction. For example, the Fabia GreenLine offers remarkably low CO<sub>2</sub> emissions of just 89 g/km. But we're more proud of the fact that we've managed to reduce emissions without reducing the performance, dimensions and driving pleasure of any of the cars. This process of being ecologically responsible begins right at the design and production stages where we explore the use of alternative materials, fuels and manufacturing processes that create minimum carbon footprint and maximum recyclability. To make the choice of going green even simpler, we offer these models in both the liftback and Combi versions.

The road to tomorrow. The ŠKODA GreenLine series.

ŠKODA Fabia Super 2000

ŠKODA's automotive tradition is further reinforced by its association with motorsports. Pushing this legacy forward is the victorious ŠKODA Fabia Super 2000. With the masterful Juho Hänninen and Mikko Markkula behind the wheel, this modified version of the Fabia went on to sweep the IRC 2010, winning the top position in both the Manufacturers and Drivers Championships. It also continued with impressive further victories in six national rally championships.
