The Audi A5

Centre of attention: the driver

There's one thing that never lets the Audi engineer or designer go once it has a grip on them: the driving experience. It's their motivation and at the same time the scale against which the innovative power of ultramodern technologies, and the fascination of progressive design, have to be measured. This is the background against which the Audi A5, as a new model line, opens an entirely new chapter in the Audi product portfolio. It systematically follows the function of movement in design and technology, and arouses pure desire to get behind the wheel.

Sportiness, elegance and high performance are characteristics which are today associated with every Audi model and which are a basic principle of the Audi A5. The foundations for this are provided by a formal idiom that obtains its fascination from the dynamic interaction of concave and convex surfaces and vital body lines within what is almost a classic Gran Turismo silhouette.

The fine aesthetics of the Audi A5 result from the powerful statement made by its blend of function and design. This applies equally to the body and the interior. Audi designers refer to this as a holistic design concept – an approach that communicates the logic of the Audi A5's sporty character and, above all, its harmony.

Exceptional awareness of what sportiness calls for is shown by the driver-oriented interior of the Audi A5 with its asymmetric cockpit architecture focused on the driver. The controls, inlays, armrests and storage compartments in the doors of the Audi A5 combine to create an impression of exemplary visual harmony. Surfaces full of life invite the occupants to explore and 'feel' the interior architecture. As one would expect from a coupé, this full four-seater is available in a wide range of seat upholstery materials and colours, with additional exclusive customisation options.
